All for the Lord...

The Process. It is all about the Process. Like a clock spring unwinding: I tell a story.

Like most people, I am going to end up worm food and forgotten. The most likely end to my story will include my computer hard drive being thrown out, and all my digital art with it. I have long since lost connection to most of my property. I've lived so many places. Most possessions can be thrown out and repurchased. My life is about the process. I listen to music on repeat; it inspires me to draw cartoons; I write Etoonin', and on to some new music. It's a process. I want my cartoons to matter. I want to be the best. I figure I've got 10 years to get really good, then ten years to draw on top of my game. Bill Watterson, who drew Calvin & Hobbes, one of the best, only drew ten years. I've got ten years too: ten years at the top of my game. What do you think of these cartoons? Wait! Don't tell me. They are not my best. Part of the process is just practice: putting out the work. I want to do better, and I'm a prayin', but I've got a long ways to go. I also want to make money: money to fuel other creative pursuits. I like certain songs that are timeless. You could listen to them in any era and they'd make sense. That's the kind of music I want to make. I want to touch people. I want people to feel their own soul when they listen to Jim Bures music. These are the dreams. But I lack focus. I keep forgetting, and get caught up in other things. Tom M. once called me a dragonfly, darting to and fro. It's so true. But as he said, even a dragonfly has purpose. We all exist to extol God's glory. Some do it willingly, some will bend the knee only at the end. I don't wanna be one of them. I wanna pray. I wanna ask. God? Please make me the best. I don't want to settle for anything less. That's me. That's toon in. And, in a nutshell, it is also All for the Lord. May God bless you, my cartoon family: thanks for the support!
